Workplace Institute: Investigations Training - Gareth Jones

The presentation dissects the investigation by the RCMP of a fatal police shooting that, like every other investigation, was less than perfect. The death was the subject of a judicial Commission of Inquiry that received national attention, as was the investigation. The focus of the presentation is whether the investigation met fundamental investigative principles that apply to any kind of investigation. It discusses the thoroughness of the evidence gathering process, the quality of investigative interviews and objectivity throughout the investigation.

North American Center for Threat Assessment and Trauma Response (NACTATR) – Kevin Cameron

The fields of Violence Threat Risk Assessment (VTRA) and Crisis-Trauma Response are inseparably connected. A worldwide pandemic has demonstrated how high-profile and protracted trauma can intensify symptom development in individuals and entire systems. This includes an intensification in violence and suicidality. This presentation will unfold the effects of the pandemic on post-pandemic mental health by expanding on the effects of quarantine and the reality that high-profile trauma does not generally create new dynamics in human systems but instead intensifies already existing ones. From the aftermath of the George Floyd tragedy to the “Freedom Convoys” and beyond, these dynamics are being duplicated in our post-secondary communities and they can be successfully address through trauma-informed leadership and skillful multidisciplinary collaboration.

OPP Cybercrime Investigation Team - D/Sgt. Vern Crowley

You think you are ready because nothing has gotten through in the past, penetration testing was done with no known vulnerabilities but wait, that was yesterday... Threat vectors and variables are constantly changing. All it takes is one small change to the code and it is a new variable. Like a human virus (let's take COVID-19 for example), how many variables/variants have there been since this began? The virus has mutated to different strains and so far, we have been lucky and the vaccine currently in place is doing its job. But how long until it mutates into a strain where we are no longer protected? We will not see it coming, it will just happen. Do you know how to "Ride the Storm" and keep your business running and customer service operational? We will discover if you are ready for when and how to get there.

MNP – Cliff Trollope

In this interactive presentation and discussion, MNP will share observations and leading practices observed over the past two years with respect to management of complex emergencies and the importance of business continuity. Attendees will be given the opportunity to share their learnings on the topics, all with a view to enhancing resiliency at the institutions and positioning for successful emergency response going forward.
